

After all the trivia, chaos and crazy schedules, obligations, worries, pressures, hopes, disappointments, joys, tragedies, and stresses in your life, you do not have much time to think about anything else for you or your Families. Between friends, family and work, what's left? Not much, and usually it appears there is no end in sight, either. There just does not seem to be enough time to do anything extra, even if you want to. That is being human in our societies today. The problem with reality is that amidst all that busyness, not having the time does not reduce in any way the value or urgency of changing, time-vulnerable things you cannot get around to considering or doing. They continue to change, go away or move on.

Yet, time or not, in the distant future, when all the "dust clears" for you, having read these pages could easily be the single most important thing you ever did for your Families' memories of each other. That is quite a statement, and that is why, in respect for how important this subject really is, this will not be a series of bullets and hooks but rather a sincere attempt to introduce you to something you probably never thought of as so important for your Families' memories –in fact, in the face of your Families' changes, it could be seen as a top priority. That is what makes it wonderful; it is different, important and absolutely about your Families and their aging and transitions every day.

In our societies, with everything claiming that it is the most important and life-altering thing to do right now, how would you ever know? Most agree that we should not let all the "noise" and the hectic-ness of life obscure the fundamental, urgent and good that exists or is possible. Unfortunately, somehow the crush of every-day life always seems to get in the way. Time passes, and we do not even know what opportunities we are losing, because we never recognized them in the first place. Maybe not knowing about things we can do, or the value in urgency, is a blessing; however, we believe, and clearly it is our observation, that not knowing and not doing or even delaying is never a blessing, when it comes to capturing, stimulating and preserving memories, which like people's lives are always time-sensitive.

Memories are hands-down the most precious, most taken for granted, and ironically the least durable, of all things that you will ever experience as a human being with loved ones. You work hard to survive, support and provide for those you care deeply about every day. In your quest to do the best for your Family, do not overlook this always time-critical area, memories. It is the most human concern of them all, whether we are building and preserving them for ourselves or for others, and they are the very core of why and how you do and tolerate all the rest. You are finally getting an opportunity here to recognize that. It really is that simple and fundamentally important.

Please kindly note that we are passionate about this and may not know how to impress best upon you the absolute wonder, importance and urgency to you and your Family of what we help you to preserve. However, if we work together to understand these things, the result can be to capture something so important that it will give you and your loved ones great comfort, security and pride. We think the search for those things is ultimately why you put up with, and navigate through, everything else that is out there.

How can we recognize what is really valuable and important for our Families? We believe that, if given the chance, your brain will figure it out. That is why, for your Families' memories, you should read the following. The least that will happen is that you will be surprised:

At one time or another, in reference to someone you care deeply about, you have probably thought or will think, "I miss the sound of their voice," or "If I could only hear their voice again," or "I wish I could hear what I sounded like, when I was growing up." Although most people are unlikely to contemplate these things often, or think there is an option to do anything about it, or believe that they have done something about it with videos, these thoughts are a true recognition of what our minds remember, as triggered by the voices of those we love.

When you remember something about someone you care about, you will retain what you retain for whatever reasons, and some of that stored memory you will be able to retrieve in the future. Incredibly, if you also in the future hear their voices in vivid detail, the range of what you remember and feel is extraordinarily greater. Your brain has the information, it just needs the nuances of sound to help unfold so much more. In this way, just hearing their voice unlocks more, and therefore, the voice heard is an extraordinary gift for the mind. That gift is actually more useful and more meaningful as time passes.

Certainly, the notion of just how important the voice is to memory and how important to preserve it at these levels may be foreign to you. That is understandable because it has never been an option for you to think you could do anything about capturing your Families' voices in such master-quality. The wonderful and surprising thing is that you actually now have the opportunity to do something about it for yourself and for your Family. You can give your kids studio master-quality sound of their grandparents' voices, or their parents' voices, or their own voices when they were growing up. Sure, you may not have thought that such a thing was important because you just do not think about it. However, it is priceless if you do it and absolutely un-retrievable if you do not. Perhaps you believe it would be nice to record but it is not a priority. We encourage you to consider that the opposite might be true.

When our loved ones grow older or we go through changes in our lives, our voices change, and so too, the memories formed with them and the thoughts they trigger, when we hear those voices again. This is true for everyone, at all times, everywhere in the world. There are no exceptions. The memories triggered are especially intense and intricate when the voices we hear are of those we love and hold dear and when they are heard in great detail. Whoever we are and no matter where we are, or whatever our backgrounds, voices, and our use of their wonderful affects upon us, are universal.

Life changes, and the brain recognizes sound as a great key to a person before and after those changes. We all change. Children grow up, our loved ones age, folks pass on, and life's opportunities present us with amazing, fundamental adjustments in ourselves. All this is reflected in the changing voice. Those are simple facts that we live with and practice every day without thinking. We listen and are inspired to memory every day. Even in silence, our brains contemplate the voices of those who are most important to our lives.

The fact that we really do change significantly, and the mind knows it in great part from audio clues, is why we record the human voice throughout those changes and why we do that with such special audio detail. Whenever you and your Family listen to the recordings, you will feel that affect and clarity.

This recording is fun and valid for every family in the world. We, of course, cannot record every family in the world. However, we can record your loved ones. You see it in the media all the time; artists and celebrities recording in studios but you never had the option to record your voice at that quality, much less affordably recording your Families' voices in their own homes with that quality! Now you do have that ability. Why would the voices you hold so dear and that make up your world be less important than those of the famous? Actually, recording a song or sound track is far less important. Even the entertainers' and celebrities' families' voices usually are not recorded in this natural way. As strange as it sounds, you actually have a recording opportunity that their fame and celebrity generally inhibits their families from enjoying/recording. That opportunity is recording a master-quality audio snapshot of your Families' voices for the future in the comfort of their own homes. It is an astounding thing to do for memory.

If we record our loved ones' voices in vivid audio detail, preserving the nuances in proportion to what the brain is capable of recognizing, the brain, later upon hearing those recordings, bathes itself in rich memories that are far more complex than a photo, video or simple recording can stimulate. The truly great thing is that the brain can do this years later, when simply triggered by those voices' detail. Memories that were seemingly lost may flow again clearly, because the brain is stimulated by the nuances of the voice, when hearing those we love. It really does not matter what your Father, Mother, Child, Grandparents, Sisters and Brothers are saying. It matters that you hear their voices again. Hearing your own voice again and those around you can make all the difference in re-affirming life and for what you are able to recall.

Changes in life are reflected to the brain by changes in the voice. It is really that simple, and it cannot be avoided. The brain uses these "snapshots" of sound to preserve and color our memories at any time. We really cannot say what the mind will remember; however, we can trigger many wonderful memories with simply the details of the specific voices. We can give the mind that option.

The wonderful part is; it really is that easy to do this. The voice triggers memories, and the more detailed the voice is, the more vivid the memories. That is why we record in such high quality. Home movies, digital recording programs, and photos all play a part in preserving memories. Nevertheless, studio-quality audio snapshots of our loved ones' voices are a completely different dimension in preserving and increasing what we can recall in life. It is a true wonder that something so easy, fast and such a great deal of fun for the family is capable of preserving so much for that family. It is also ironic that something so simple to do and having such lasting value is rarely done or thought about. So much of everything in life gets in the way of preserving the very thing that makes it worth living –voices and memories.

The other ridiculous reality is that, once you realize that you can preserve your Families' voices like this forever, there is virtually nothing in your lives that will delay the recording of your loved ones' voices that is more important or ultimately more valuable than what these recordings preserve for you. Nothing! Everything else is fleeting. Years from now, the things that got in the way will mean nothing. Ultimately, everything pales in the comparison to preserving their voices whenever possible. Those simple voices, easily recorded in stunning detail and preserved forever, only increase in importance and value to the mind with age. Nothing else does that. The truth is that you will still do the other things, regardless of their importance and urgency. We are just encouraging you to consider recording ahead of them when you are able, and not simply if it is convenient for you or you have nothing else to do. Clearly, convenience and time are always at a premium, when you are doing everything and when everyone is tugging at you. Therefore, to get this extraordinary thing done, in the face of everything else and with some urgency, the order of a few things has to change. That is really nothing to ask when you realize what recording in this way can do for your Families' permanent memories.

When you do this type of recording, it is interesting and fun to do and gives you the option in the future to hear your loved ones again in extraordinary detail and to remember the shared activity of doing the recording. It is a real life-affirming, exciting, memorable activity for the family at all ages, from the baby to retirement and to assisted living. When folks of all ages realize that they are not being photographed or videoed, they participate more willingly and enjoy the moment. That is why we do not film or video. The families' comfort and lack of self-consciousness makes the experience rewarding for everyone. When you reach 100 years old, and if you had made these recordings of your loved ones in the past, what will you actually then have? You will have extraordinary, irreplaceable, life-affirming, vivid sounds and memories. Your brain will fill in the rest, as stimulated by the sounds of those who shaped your life. The plain truth is that if you do not record, there will be no future chance at any price. If you record, at least you will have the option to hear them again in such wonderful detail.

There is nothing really complicated about it. Things change. If you do not record, things still change, and you cannot get them back. You may remember much about them; however, it is impossible to recall them in the same detail that can occur when your mind has the actual voices to hear. There is also always, every day, a point where characteristics of age or people just go away. They are just gone, not to return. That is life. The child will have grown, and their voice and naiveté changes, the grandparents will have passed on, the parent will have slowed. We can watch and live or take this step and add a little something extraordinary to our arsenal against memory loss.

We are taking you down a different path. That path is the possibility and welcomed urgency of snapshots of everyone's voices, today –captured for tomorrow, and tomorrow again –captured for the next tomorrow. It is nothing more than that, and at the same time, what your brain does with those voice snapshots the next week or years from now will be nothing less than astonishing. That is why we are passionate about getting you to think about and do this recording. Yes, you have probably never really thought about doing such a thing or about its value. Now you have it.

We can record now with ease, and it is a phenomenal gift because, if we lose their voices, through age, death or life's changes and growth, without having captured them, we cannot retrieve their voices later with any effort or wish. Nothing will replace the actual voices. Once lost, nothing brings them back. Yet, recording now, could bring you great comfort and memories, and that is priceless.

Trips, vacations, the stress of life, insanely busy schedules, obligations, lack of time, hectic, overwhelming chaotic lives, conflicts, pressures and uncertainties, all are trivial, and indeed laughable, in comparison to what can be preserved here so easily and to how important voices are to our lives and to our families.

Most people do not think about this recording because they do not have the chance. You should think about this now with an ever-present urgency, as always justified by constant changes. The fact that you are reading this means that you do now have the option! We cannot tell you what the loss or preservation of your loved ones' voices will mean to your mind. You will know. However, we can help you to contemplate it and immediately give your Families' possibilities.

“What you do not know you cannot lose” is not a true statement. Loss is still loss. Time moves on. Urgency is still urgency. When we record in this way, we take a wonderful step toward stopping the loss and stimulating memory.

Thank you for your patience in reading this information and for considering, in the name of change, acting now for your Families.

Best regards,
